TWO HOMES ARE VISITED BY ONE NIGHT PROWLER

Got $337.75 from First—Girl's Scream Chased Him from Second

Miss Mary Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith, 2522 103rd St., was awakened at 3:30 Sunday morning, to find the glow of an electric fire burning about her room. Miss Smith, who had been sleeping in a room on the second floor, was awakened by the fire in a manner as to awaken the whole household. She immediately called out, and in the meantime the burglar, who had been prowling about the house, retreated through the smoke and flames. Miss Smith hurriedly coming down stairs, was unable to see a trace of the burglar, who had been seen by the fire. Fire which started from ignited grease between two ranges in the kitchen of the Shasta Cafe, 10099 Jasper avenue, at 4:45 Sunday afternoon, spread with such rapidity through the wooden block which the cafe is situated as to result in a loss of nearly one hundred thousand dollars.

The participating losses by the blaze are Shasta Cafe, $25,000; Yale Cafe, $4,000, insured; Cantor Photographic Studio, heavy loss, amount not ascertained; Dr. Boulanger, $4,000, covered by insurance; P. Burns and Company, considerable loss, insured; Yale Hotel, $3,000, insured. These estimates do not include the cost of the building destroyed.

Lloyd George Says Common Sense and Experience Are Best Standards

LONDON, Aug. 28.—(Canadian Press)—Premier Lloyd George, while at Barmley attending the wedding of his daughter, said today that the world will be right if common sense and experience are the best standards. He said there never had been a time when the world was so wrong as it was at present. He said that the world was in a state of confusion and that the only way to bring it back to normal was by common sense and experience. He said that the world was in a state of confusion and that the only way to bring it back to normal was by common sense and experience.

Right lines of how were playing on the flames for over one hour, the fire of smoke being so great as to greatly hamper the efforts of the firemen, whose efforts were probably saved a serious conflagration. The fire started in the kitchen of the Shasta Cafe, 10099 Jasper avenue, at 4:45 Sunday afternoon. The fire spread with such rapidity through the wooden block which the cafe is situated as to result in a loss of nearly one hundred thousand dollars.

Believe Dublin Will Accept the Terms Offered by Lloyd George; Despatch Plenipotentiaries to London Meeting

DUBLIN, Aug. 28.—Mansion House, where the Sinn Fein "parliament" was in session last week, in fact the whole of Dublin, was deserted today. Politicians and their camp followers took advantage of one of the last weeks of the summer and went into the country.

There is apparently little apprehension here among the business men and farmers that hostilities will be resumed.

Some of the business men claiming to have inside information declare that Sinn Fein plenipotentiaries will be in London before the end of the week, or at any rate that the Daily Express "cable" which has power to deal with the matter, will have announced by that time that it is ready to accept Mr. Lloyd George's invitation for a conference at his official residence in Downing Street, London.

New York Times' History On its 25th Anniversary As Told by the Publisher

NEW YORK TIMES
The New York Times is admitted to be one of the most successful newspapers in the United States. Its average daily circulation in 1920 was over 500,000. The manager and principal owner gives the following account of the Times and its work during the 25 years that he has been connected with it, which cannot fail to be of interest to newspaper readers generally. The Times was founded in 1851 and came under its present management in 1896:

A 25TH ANNIVERSARY

Today twenty-five years ago—August 18, 1896—the New York Times passed to my management and has ever since been under my unrestricted control. So it may be fitting that I should on the account of my stewardship to those who have made The New York Times of today possible—to its readers—and take occasion to make clearer the forces that are truly directing and influencing its conduct. I am reluctant to strike the personal note that may manifest itself in this recital of the history of The New York Times as it has been my endeavor to have the public as well as those who are associated in creating the paper regard it as an institution, and so far as possible and feasible, make impersonal the treatment of news and its interpretation. The humblest of men, however, enters into all of man's activities and it fortunately exists in the conduct of the Times. A newspaper if possible freed from the frailties of humanity, with no sense of responsibility, no sympathies, no dislikes, no milk of human kindness, would be a nuisance and a plague, an excrescence on the bodies social and polite, and would be despised and shunned and consequently without influence and altogether an unnecessary evil. It is my endeavor to make an effort to make The New York Times a creditable human institution. We are confident we can leave to others to say to what extent we have succeeded, and whether this effort has contributed to the general welfare and gaining respect for the honesty, integrity and patriotism of American newspapers.

I am pleased to be able to say that The New York Times is firmly established as an independent conservative newspaper, free from any influence that might direct or divert its management from a righteous and public-spirited course. It is financially independent and in the enjoyment of a large and increasingly profitable legitimate income from circulation, advertising and news-gathering. The aggregate probably the largest income of any newspaper in the world. The net result of its operations is beyond the earlier dreams of those who are its chief initiators, and it is gratifying to know no interest they can serve that can give them greater joy, satisfaction and comfort. I wish that though the firm's financial position in the minds of those who may be inclined to believe that some ulterior motive is at work, influence the policy of The New York Times, and that they may understand that, being free from pecuniary considerations, personal greed, no man would voluntarily forfeit the confidence and good-will of the community by degrading himself through loss of his self-respect or the surrender of his independence. Persons may disagree with the New York Times—with its treatment of news and its views thereon—but there is no ground on which they can attribute to it base or improper motives for such differences of opinion. The New York Times is an open book. And it is no worse than it may seem to appear, its faults are those of a man fully alive to the knowledge that at least in purpose it is better than he have been able to make. On the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the present management I wish first to make grateful acknowledgments to the several hundred thousand readers of The New York Times who have expressed by their faithful and generous support their hearty endorsement of the kind of newspaper we are endeavoring to produce. We are fully sensible of the fact that the editorial position on public questions has not always had the unanimous approval of our readers. They have honestly differed from us but whether we are right or wrong our views are not directly or indirectly pressed upon them. We thought that they may please or displease a reader. We do not now have we ever sought to influence because of our own or unfavorable attitude toward men or measures. So we flatter ourselves that the third of morning newspapers are read quite as quietly and unemotionally improved in The New York Times and made as far as possible complete—such as financial news, market reports, real estate transactions, court records, commercial and educational news; the news of books, the routine affairs of the national, state and city governments; and there also attractively presented decent and trustworthy pictures of men, women and events. Altogether the work undertaken in the direction was to tell promptly and accurately the happenings and occurrences that were not sensational but of real importance in the affairs of the people. This supplemented the general news of the day intelligently and quietly presented and with editorial interpretation that was fair and informative. The columns of The Times were open without money and without price for the presentation of views honestly differing with the opinion of The Times. News was practiced to an extent never theretofore done by a newspaper. All of this soon gave The Times the reputation that its readers could expect full and trustworthy information regarding any and all angles of the news. In the very first month of the present management such was the fairness and impartiality of The Times that the Democratic and Republican managers of the national committee voluntarily solicited letters of thanks and appreciation to The Times management.

We began on Aug. 18, 1896, with a daily issue of 18,000, over half of which were returned unsold, and, as said before, with a deficit of $1,000 a day. The gross receipts for the first year were $561,423, and at the end of the year the deficit was $68,121.67. The second year the deficit was $75,529; but in the third year the balance was $30,252 on the right side and has been so increasingly ever since. The gross income for the year ending June 30, 1921, was $1,000,000, every dollar of which, less an average of $125,000 a year withdrawn from the business and distributed as dividends, has been expended in making The Times what it is today. Not one dollar of the $1,000,000 was a gift or a gratuity, but every cent was the result of the sale of the paper. It is a fortunate outcome for those who own the shares of The New York Times Company and who have been helped and benefited for so many years, but it is also a happy and encouraging result for the country and particularly for American journalism.

There was a time when it was no secret in financial circles that The New York Times Company had limited resources and that it was an active borrower, and this was the case whenever it suited the purpose of malevolent persons to attempt to discredit the newspaper. Among the stories were that there was English or foreign capital in the Times; that traction interests were owners or controllers; that certain political figures were "backing" it; that department stores were financially interested; that well-known persons were "backing" it. The truth is that from the beginning the Times has been a company of men who were not interested in the Times for any other reason than that it was a business in which they had a personal interest. The Times has been a company of men who were not interested in the Times for any other reason than that it was a business in which they had a personal interest.

I was reluctant to go at such length into the business and financial history of The New York Times, but think this occasion is the time once and for all to make the indisputable facts clear.

I do not wish to over-emphasize the material progress of The New York Times, as like results may be obtained in any well-conducted business in the world's great metropolis, for on this twenty-fifth anniversary of the present management we prefer to be appreciated by the product we are offering the public for their information and guidance, and to have our judgment by the highest standards of honesty, fairness and cleanliness, and public service applied in making newspapers.
